

Testing and Evaluation

The purpose of testing is the mutual assessment of progress by teacher and student. Each discipline has its own philosophy of learning and the measurement thereof, and each subject area is unique and calls for a different set of skills.

The classroom teacher is the person who can best assess the needs, problems, and special progress of his or her students. Teachers should share their philosophy and method of testing and evaluation with students before a test and return and review test questions and answers with students. Tests are used as a teaching tool and test review is an important component in the learning process.
